THE COW.

Just a Few Hints that will keep the Milk Content and Generous.

Make the cows comfortable and keep them as quiet as possible. Any harsh treatment that excites or irritates the cow lessens the quantity of her milk. See that she has an abundant supply of wholesome, nutritious food and pure water to drink. Give her all she will eat up clean and keep water where she can help herself. Keep a supply of salt where she can help herself. Have her quarters clean and dry and supply plenty of bedding. She should be milked only with dry hands and only after the udders have been brushed clean. If the teats are dirty wash them off with tepid water and wipe dry with a clean cloth. Milking should be done, and the milk kept only where the surrounding air is pure, and free from all objectionable or tainting colors. Allowing the cows to be, or the milking to be, done in a foul-smelling stable or yard, imparts to the milk an injurious taint. Keep the milk clean. Filth or dirt once dissolved in the milk can be only partly removed either by straining or running it through a separator. Averting the milk immediately after straining adds materially in getting rid of animal filth.

Tin vessels only should be used in handling the milk or cream. These should always be first washed out with warm water and then scalded and wiped dry. All milk should be brought directly to the dairy house and strained as soon as possible after it is drawn from the cow. If the separator is used the cream can be set away to ripen and the skim milk be used as needed. By using the separator, not only is there a saving of time and labor, but the skim milk can be used to much better advantage.

When the milk must be set away for the cream to rise, it should be set where it will cool reasonably rapidly, as the cooling of the milk sets currents in motion that bring the cream to the surface. Any disturbance of the milk after it is set away tends to break up these cur-

We are now able to buy for cash and can sell groceries and meat as cheap as some of our wealthy competitors who have always paid cash. We have also an interest in a sugar plantation and can give you 33 lbs. yellow sugar for $1, canned salmon 10c per can, selected apricots in 1 lb boxes 15c, flour $2.50 per cwt., canned corn 5c per can, 6 bars best soap 25c, finnan haddie, honey in 1 lb sections, Farinosa Swiss food, prepared buckwheat flour, Rose brand lard, the very purest. J. F. SMITH.

rents and interferes with the process. The cream should invariably be skimmed from the milk before the milk is sour. Whenever a fresh skimming of cream is added to that already in the cream vessel, the whole should be thoroughly stirred together. This is essential in order to secure uniform ripeness. All cream should be allowed to stand at least six hours after it has been mixed with older cream before churning. Fresh cream added to old cream and then churned immediately is largely lost.

The best churning temperatures are between 57 and 60 degrees during the summer and between 61 and 64 degrees in winter. Use the thermometer; do not rely upon guesswork.

Secure the proper conditions for the milk and cream, and it is no more work to make a uniform, good quality of butter than to make poor butter.

For Washing Farm Vehicles.

The device shown in the cut will save much time and labor in washing wagons.

FOR WASHING FARM VEHICLES.

A narrow, water-tight box on the shape shown in the illustration is slipped under the wheel when it has been "jacked" up. A pail of water is now poured in and the wheel revolved. The dirt can thus be removed quickly and much more easily than when a pail is used to hold the water. Once used, the benefits of this device will be very apparent.

The Good Side.

We may, if we choose, make the worst of one another. Everyone has his weak points; everyone has his faults. We may make the worst of these; we may fix our attention constantly upon these. But we may also make the best of one another. We may forgive, even as we hope to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others, and ask what we should wish to be done to us and thought of us were we in their place. By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain; and earth will become like heaven; and we shall become not unworthy followers of Him whose name is Love.

Advantages of Keeping Late Hours.

A German doctor, who has been collecting information about the habits of long-lived persons, thus finds that the majority of those who attain old age indulged in late hours. Eight out of ten persons over 80 never went to bed till well into the small hours, and did not get up again until late in the day.—Lippincott's Magazine.

CAN'T YOU SLEEP?

Sleeplessness is one of the most frequent symptoms of heart and nerve troubles. It affects all ages and all ages. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills restore the nerves to healthy action and regulate the heart. Mrs. Boone, Fredericton, N. B., tells how they work. "I could never rest well, and often woke up with a start, and then sleep left me for the night. These pills gave me almost immediate relief, giving me healthful, refreshing sleep, and I am now a healthy woman."

J. R. DAFOE.

Hold on to Your Sheep.

It is folly to leave one branch of the live stock business for another, when other men are doing the same thing, so that prices are utterly demoralized. Nothing but loss can be the result of such a procedure. The time to buy is when every man wants to sell; the time to sell is when every man wants to buy. A short time ago stockmen were tumbling over one another trying to dispose of sheep, practically giving them away. Of course, any sane man could see that the outcome of such a practice must, sooner or later, make sheep paying property. So just hold on to your sheep; that is, all the best of them; the sooner the culls go the better, but the good ones, feed up, and breed up and be ready to take the reward. Mutton sells well, even if wool is too low for profit.—Rural World.

It Keeps the Fowls From Trampling on Their Rations.

Despite all that has ever been said to the contrary, the idea still prevails in some sections that poultry can get along and even thrive if their food is presented to them in the simplest manner. This is a mistake where soft food is given, it is generally trampled upon by all the birds before it is fully eaten, and, in consequence, they are compelled to devour a more or less amount of dirt, which is usually of such a nature as to be no good to them. In order to avoid this I would suggest that a feed-box be made, having a door of slats made of laths as shown herewith; also, on the side opposite from the door, I should have slats, as seen from the inside of the box. Place the food in this, shut the door and the fowl can reach the food from each side readily between the slats, but cannot soil it. Furthermore, a dish of water can be set within it, and the fowls can reach through and drink, but they cannot pollute it as they otherwise would. By this device stray cats and dogs have no chance of getting at the food, should it happen to be of a nature palatable to them, and stealing it away from the fowls. The semi-rotundity of the roof is to keep the fowls from roosting on it.

DURING the present month three bye-elections have been held in Quebec. Two Liberals were returned by Acclama-tion and in Drummond and Athabasca the Liberal majority was 1,300 as compared to 465 in the general elections. The Tories might as well make it unanimous in Centre Toronto.

Mr. LOUNT has resigned his seat in Centre Toronto and Geo. H. Bertram has been chosen to carry the Liberal Standard to victory. The Conservative nomination is practically going a begging. It has already been offered to half-a-dozen but they have all declined the honor.

The Whitecaps over in Ohio are in "big business" at present. The Toronto Telegram, an independent Conservative paper, edited by John Ross Robertson, M. The Telegram concludes by saying that "as it is the Government, unless it kindly and Empire are teeming these days with virulent articles anent Sir Wilfrid Laurier's visit to Washington. The Premier's motives are impugned, his loyalty questioned by fair means and foul, and by every species of misrepresentation those Tory journals are endeavoring to discredit his mission and obstruct the negotiations. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Sir L. H. Davis are engaged in a diplomatic mission, at a foreign capital, which has to do with vexed international questions. British newspapers are refraining from any comment until the negotiations are closed and the result handed out. This course is not only wise but patriotic and is dictated by common-sense and fairness. Think of journals like the World and Mail prating about loyalty and at the same time doing all in their power to belittle the nation's representatives at Washington, hoping thereby to bring their mission into disrepute and render it abortive.

Two Pictures.

One Rich, Bright and Cheerful; the Other Gloomy, Dark and Muddy.

Forty-five samples of colored cloth are shown on the Diamond Dye sample card, from which can be produced over one hundred good, solid colors. Every dyed sample is full, rich, brilliant and fast, showing just what any woman of ordinary intelligence can do with Diamond Dyes. This is picture number one.

The common imitation dyes, and dyes composed of soap grease as a principal ingredient, show but a dozen or fifteen colors, and so imperfect in color tone and power that the small collection looks gloomy, despondent, and sickly to any individual with a taste for the beautiful. This is picture number two.

Go those in doubt we say, send your address to Wells & Richardson Co., Montreal, for a color card of Diamond Dyes; it will be sent free.

The Diamond Dyes being the easiest to dye with give all the grand results in beauty and fastness of color that the heart can possibly desire.

Wasted Indignation.

The man with the florid face and the bold head grew more and more uneasy as he sat at the restaurant table. He tried to read a newspaper, but every now and then would drop it, adjust his glasses and glare up and down the room to find the waiter to whom he had given his order. At last he managed to detain him, at the risk of being scolded by the soup he carried, and inquired:

"How about that dinner I ordered?" "It will be here immediately, sir," was the answer.

The guest tried to read his newspaper once more, but as time passed his uneasiness increased until he was glaring up and down the room as fiercely as ever. He found his waiter again and the same conversation was repeated. After two or three more similar attempts he arose and went over to another waiter, who was gracefully leaning against a pillar.

"Look here," said the guest, "I want to know something."

"Yes," responded the waiter.

"What I want to know is this: Am I ever going to get any dinner, and if I do get it, which will it be?"

The blundering young man looked at him and replied:

"Excuse me, I am afraid you have made a mistake. I am only a waiter; not a prophet." Detroit Free Press.

NAPANEE, FRIDAY, NOV. 19th 1897.

THE CONSERVATIVES of Centre Toronto are finding it a case of many are chosen but few respond to the call.

We have a strong Reform Government in Ontario, but the weakness of the Opposition renders it doubly secure.

The less the Mail and World know of the matter the more learnedly they dilate on Laurier's mission to Washington.

Was the hope of the single tax theory buried with Henry George? Already croakers are prophesying its early death.

Mr. WHITNEY calls the Patrons "a horde of political adventurers." Here at least is one lawyer who doesn't love the farmers. He finds that he can't work them.

ANOTHER of Mr. Whitney's campaign cries has been ruthlessly torn from him. It now transpires that the Provincial Inspector of prisons did not draw on the Province for $12 for a marine glass but paid for it out of his own pocket. The Humber pig is still alive, however, and St. John is holding his own.

THE License-Holders' Association of Toronto are requesting the Government to put into their hands the enforcement of the license laws. They also want the whiskey detectives done away with. The easiest way for hotel keepers to do away with whiskey informers is to keep the law. The remedy is in their own hands.

ONE HONEST MAN.

Dear Editor.—Please inform your readers that if written to confidentially, I will mail, in a sealed letter, particulars of a genuine, honest, home cure, by which I was permanently restored to health and vigor after years of suffering from nervous debility, sexual weakness, night sweats and weak shrunken parts. I was robbed and swindled by the quacks until I nearly lost faith in mankind, but thank heaven I am now well, vigorous and strong, and wish to make this certain means of cure known to all sufferers. I have nothing to sell and want no money, but being a firm believer in the universal brotherhood of man, I am desirous of helping the unfortunate to regain their health and happiness. I promise you perfect secrecy. Address with stamp, W. T. MULFORD, Agents Supplies, P.O. Box 10, St. Paul, Que.

assists the Opposition by some huge blunder, may owe its salvation to the Opposition's lack of ability and to the lack of sense which is characteristic of its campaign." This is strong language from a friend, but Mr. Whitney's course has demonstrated even to his friends that one of the worst misfortunes that could befall Ontario would be his advert to power.

CHARLES MATTHEWS, who was convicted of stealing cheese from the South Lake factory, was sentenced to eighteen months in the Central Prison by Magistrate Duff, of Kingston, on the 11th inst. The prisoner pleaded hard with his worship to make the sentence two years in the penitentiary instead. The preference shown by criminals for the penitentiary should lead the officials of that institution to pattern after the Central Prison. The Kingston penitentiary has been made altogether too inviting a place and criminals who have once entered within its walls do not fear a second visit. Depriving the convicts of some of the privileges which they enjoyed, such as tobacco, etc., may have a salutary effect. Rendering the penitentiary less congenial may have a tendency to prevent convicts returning to a life of crime when they regain their liberty.

The Stratford Beacon institutes the following comparison:—"The kind of management that would be introduced into the Crown Lands Department should it, by any misfortune, fall into the hands of the Conservatives can be judged from past experience. When the Tory Government at Ottawa thought they had bluffed this province out of the disputed territory they parcelled out the timber limits therein, to the extent of 10,000 square miles, among the Charlie Rykers and other political friends at the nominal figure of 85 per square mile. When Mr. Mowat got control of these lands for the province he put a portion of them up at public auction and realized $3,557 per square mile. The difference between 85 and $3,557 per square mile is what the people of this province gained by having an honest Liberal administration at Toronto. There was not a Tory journal in Ontario that at the time had a word of condemnation for the Rykert job, and they would not, it is safe to conclude, offer any objection should Whitney & Co. do the same thing if they ever got into power."

THE Dundas Banner effectually disposes of the Opposition's foolish cry that the Ontario Government has no surplus in the following trite fashion:—"Although the Mail and other papers persist in saying that there is no surplus in the Ontario treasury it is a fact that there appears in the public accounts of the Province an entry in which the Province is shown to have received in interest the sum of $360,554 during the year 1896. There cannot be interest unless there is capital. That is fact No. 1. Fact No. 2 is that in the Statistical Year Book compiled by the Dominion authorities the surplus of assets over liabilities payable on the 31st Dec., 1896, was $4,782,580. Fact No. 3 is that the Toronto Mail said the other day that the Province has at Ottawa "a capital allowance of $2,800,000 upon which we draw interest." Year after year interest on capital flows into the provincial treasury, and yet the Whitneyites are endeavoring to make out that the Province has nothing laid by, that in fact it is several millions in debt and is "standing face to face with direct taxation." It seems childish for members of the legislature to seek to mislead the people in this way. You can no more draw interest without capital than you can get eggs without hens."

Liquid Fertilizers for Flowers

Liquid fertilizers are never-failing remedies and some kind or other is within the reach of all. A few drops of household ammonia in a pitcher of water are not lost on indifferent plants. A weekly application of soap-suds is recommended. Commercial plant food is good, but a some respects is not equal to barnyard manure, although cleaner and easier to handle.

A few table-salt bags filled with various manures, suitably tied, a pail and an old dipper are the essentials and can be tucked away in an obscure corner of the back porch or shed, ready for hot water on the occasion. Pours water on the bags in the watering-pot and the soluble parts will be leached out. Five or even ten-penny bags are good for the purpose, and the cloth can be used over and over again, simply being washed in water.

Even manure of great value but must be used judiciously, for the percentage of lime in its composition is larger than that of any other given analysis. Dove manure is even better, for it contains more organic matter, nearly as much nitrogen and a third less lime, which makes it safer to use. Sheep manure has also been known to produce marvelous growth, which may be attributed to the unusual amount of organic matter it contains. Cow manure is, perhaps, safest and best of all for general use, as it contains all things in moderation.

Strong Letters From Reliable People.

Prove The Worth of Paine's Celery Compound.

The Public Demand for the Great Medicine Fast Increasing.

The proprietors of Paine's Celery Compound have never given to the press of the country any misleading statements, and have never exaggerated either the virtue of their wonderful remedy or the astonishing character of the testimonials it has received.

Paine's Celery Compound, the greatest and most marvellous of all blood purifiers and restorers of nerve force and power, and which has a greater public demand than all other combined remedies, has been a blessing to thousands of homes in the Dominion of Canada. These medicines that make people well receive monthly scores of letters of praise from men and women rescued from disease and death. Every month of the year hundreds are restored to new life, but many being diffident in nature, and not wishing to be recognized by the public, refrain from writing for the press.

Paine's Celery Compound being a guaranteed medicine, the public have faith in it. The cures effected for those who in the past were burdened with rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney disease, liver troubles, dyspepsia, heart troubles and blood diseases are in many cases truly wonderful. Success after the doctors fail is the great boast of the world's popular medicine, Paine's Celery Compound.

Mrs. A. Perry, Post Maitland, N.S., writes as follows:

"For two years my system was all run down, and I suffered more than I can describe from nervous prostration and insomnia. At times I almost lost my reason from severe pain at base of the brain. My husband advised me to try Paine's Celery Compound, which I did, and the effects were wonderful. I soon began to sleep well; the pain left my head; my whole system was strengthened, and I am now enjoying very good health."

"I would cheerfully recommend Paine's Celery Compound to any one suffering from like troubles. You have my best wishes for the future success of your excellent remedy."

Regained After Twenty Years' Torture From That Dread Disease, Catarrh.—Hon. Geo. Taylor of Scranton, Pa., Tells the World What Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder Has Done For Him.

I was a martyr to catarrh for twenty years—tried every known remedy, but got little or no relief. Was troubled with constant dropping in the throat, terrible pains in my head, and my breath was very offensive. I was induced to give Dr. Agnew's Catarrhal Powder a trial, and the result was magical. The first application cleared my head instantly. I persisted in its use, and to day I am a cured man, and it affords me pleasure to lend my testimony.

DWARF PEAR-HEDGE.

It is a Source of Profit as Well as a Thing of Beauty.

There are numerous shrubs that are suitable for making hedges about one's lawn, whether one prefers evergreens or deciduous plants. The number of bushes that can be used in a hedge varies with the height and beauty. The dwarf pear is one of the latter. These bushes making a very graceful but not densely leaved growth; but the large tree's fruit is not desired in large quantities, nor is it a desirable plant to have near wheat fields, as it harbors one stage of the "rust" fungus of the wheat.

On my place I am planting hedges of dwarf pear trees, using winter varieties of the fruit, almost exclusively. Such a hedge row, of course, hardly suitable for the front of one's lawn, but for side rows, and for use in the rear of one's house, the dwarf pear is quite unobjectionable. As for beauty—well, anyone who has seen a long row of these little trees in full blossom will not soon forget the sight. They are very attractive little trees, also, when in full leaf, without the bloom, as they should be kept well trimmed back to secure good fruiting, as well as a good hedge. It is surprising, too, what an amount of fruit one can thus raise upon even a small place. In my own case, I am planting a pear hedge around a two-acre lot, and am now using also some cross hedges, in the rear of the buildings. It will take at least 300 trees to complete the outside row. As this will interfere very little with the planting of fruit trees over the whole interior surface of the two acres, it will be seen that on a given amount of ground one can raise much more fruit by using this outside hedge-row method. It is possible to crowd the little trees in a hedge-row, because they will be on the outside, and can thus have plenty of air and sunshine, though very close in the row; and though the row of dwarf pear trees may be quite close to the inside, larger fruit trees, the latter are not crowded by the former, since they stand up above them. This sort of work is not advisable on large commercial orchards, but on the home acre in the village lot, one wishes to make the most of every foot of ground.

Planting so many of these little pear trees, I selected winter sorts, and chose that king among pears, the Anjou, and the scarcely less inferior Lawrence. Both these pears do finely on the quince stock, and both are winter varieties. With such fruit one can store in a cool cellar and unload upon the market when the market is most in need of winter pears. With fall fruit one is very nearly at the mercy of the market, for he cannot hold the fruit for any length of time.

My own trees are set about four feet apart. In future plantings I shall increase the distance somewhat. In setting the trees be careful to get the point where the pear stock and quince root join several inches below the surface, and for the first winter, at least, give the roots a mulch for protection.

MR. STEPHEN BELISLE GLADLY
TELLS HOW HE WAS CURED.

After Other Remedies Failed to Help
Him, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Made Him A Healthy Man.

From the Montreal Herald.

Down on William street the bulk of the butter and cheese trade is done and it is there that the Montreal cold storage and freezing company's mammoth building is located. In the summer time, when extensive shipments are being made, the big block is a veritable beehive. Several well known exporting firms have their warehouses in this building and one of them is Wm. T. Ware & Co. Their head warehouse man is Mr. Stephen Belisle, who, at his name indicates, is a French-Canadian and in the prime of life. If ever there was a grateful man on the face of the earth to-day that man is Stephen Belisle. After suffering indescribable agonies for several months, he is now the picture of health and feels that it is his duty to tell all the world how he was restored to health and happiness. Mr. Belisle explained his troubles, now fortunately a thing of the past, to a reporter of the Herald recently. "My work called me to all parts of the warehouse," said he, "and sometimes I went into the freezing room without my coat or cap on and then back to the warmer atmosphere. About a year ago I became very ill with a complication of diseases. I was suffering with indigestion, biliousness and the resulting nervous disorders such as sick headache and loss of appetite. I began doctoring, but I seemed to grow worse every day. I slept very little, and as time went on I was not able to do any work, and even the exertion of moving about would tire me out. I had a very poor appetite and what food I ate did not agree with me. I also suffered from a severe pain in the back and side. During that time I had tried many medicines but they gave me no relief. I had been so weak and my system was so run down that life was a burden to me. I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills which I did with extremely beneficial results. I commenced taking the pills about Christmas time and now I am feeling so good that I thought it my

CORNER FEED BOX.

How the Work of Feeding Horses Can Be Simplified.

The importance of having everything as handy as possible in and about the farm buildings is not to be ignored. The work of feeding horses can often be simplified by erecting feed racks, as herewith represented in the cut, in the corner of each stall, right above the manger. Such a rack takes up little room, practically speaking, and when one is in a hurry during spring's work and the like, he can give his horses their hay ration in short meter, for the rack should be connected by means of the chute with the mow overhead. When the grass harvest is gathered, should the barn be crowded with hay, the mouth of the chute over each stall may be covered with a board, so as to prevent hay from settling down into it when not desired. It rarely takes long for enough of the hay to be fed out so that it may be uncovered again.

Good Use for Weeds.

Summer heat, when it comes, starts a numerous and enterprising crop of weeds into active life. These may be easily controlled by the frequent use of the iron rake, which stifles them at birth. But if, through inattention, they get the start of the gardener and need to be reduced by the hoe, they should be attacked vigorously at the first chance and not allowed to perfect and drop their seed into the soil. Pull up and shake the larger ones when not so near as to endanger valuable plants, thereby, and hoe up all others, not merely scraping the ground over, but raking it up and pulverizing while rooting out the weeds. These may then, while still green and succulent, be raked together and put into the compost heap, where they will be obliged to return to the garden at that they have purloined from his soil. This compost heap may, by a little care, be made quite an important factor in the fertility of the garden. Not only all weeds, but, as crops mature, all the garden refuse not used for mulching other duty to write the proprietors of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and let them know how extremely grateful I am for the cure their medicine has effected in me. I had taken only six boxes when my condition of health was a paradise to what it had been for some months previous. HOW IT IS DONE

An Incident from Real Life That Seemed to Have a True Touch.

Charles Joyce and his wife had just returned from the honeymoon, when they had their first misunderstanding, and they had just kissed and made it up, and everything was perfectly lovely, and even more than that.

"And we'll never quarrel again, will we, love?"

"No, darling, never," and he kissed her eighteen times.

"It was silly of us to quarrel when we did, wasn't it?"

"Yes, it was, and I never would have quarreled if it hadn't been for you."

"Why, dear, I didn't do it."

"No, of course, you didn't, but if it hadn't been for you it never would have happened."

"I don't think I was to blame."

"I'm sure I wasn't."

"But, you know, dear, I couldn't have done it all by myself. Somebody must have been to blame."

"Well, I wasn't the one, I'm sure."

"And I'm just as sure I wasn't."

"That's a matter of opinion."

"Of course, and my opinion is my own."

"Well, who said it wasn't?"

"There you are again. You can't talk two minutes without letting your temper get away with you."

"My temper isn't any worse than yours."

"Who said it was? I wasn't saying anything about my temper, was I?"

"But you were about mine, and I don't propose to listen to it. If I can't live in peace here, I can go to an hotel and be quiet, anyhow."

"Well, go to the hotel. It's a more fitting place for you than a decent home."

"This is a fine home, isn't it. Good night, I'm off."

"You are a tyrant; that's what you are."

"Well, you need that sort."

"Boo-hoo boo-hoo! I'm going home to mother."

And then they made it up again.—Three Bits.

FROM PERSONAL EXPERIENCE.

Many have tried for years to discover a remedy suitable to their own case for the Constipation, Biliousness, Indigestion, Headache, Kidney and Liver Complaints arising from Poor Digestion, Weak Stomach, and Disordered Liver.

To these we say: Try the new medicine—

Laxa-Liver PILLS

Read what people say. Here it is.

Miss S. LAWSON, Moncton, N. B., says: "They cured me of constipation and sick headache."

Mr. H. JAMES, St. Nicholas Hotel, Hamilton, Ont., says: "They are a pleasant, sure and quick cure for constipation, dyspepsia and sick headache."

Miss M. E. HICKS, South Bay, Ont.: "Laxa-Liver Pills are excellent for sick-headache, causing no pain or griping."

Mrs. JOHN TOMLINSON, Hamilton, Ont.: "They are a perfect cure for even the plants, may be put into it, wet thoroughly and covered with a little earth and thus rotted down and retained for use as so much homemade fertilizer. It should be established in some out-of-the-way corner; a hole dug a few feet deep to accommodate it will be found convenient and the contents drenched with hose from time to time to promote decomposition, after which a few shovelfuls of earth will delay evaporation and help retain the gases. When used the addition of wood ashes and bone dust, of course, makes it by so much the richer.—Boston Transcript.

Live Stock Pointers.

The fall pig should be kept by itself during the winter, fed well and kept warm.

If food for stock is cooked at all, it should be cooked and not simply warmed.

If your hog is sick, a vermifuge, such as worm seed, will very likely reach the case.

If you have a halter puller, arrange the halter so that it will choke. That will cure.

The safest plan is to get rid of cattle that have swelling on the jaw. It may be humane, but Swelling and stiffness in the jaw will kill a pig in a few days. It is a sure sign of trouble.

Two liters of pig's manure will produce a noted breeder takes.

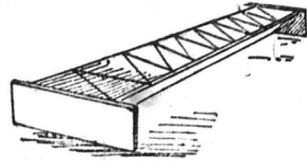

The farmer should manufacture meat, butter, cheese and eggs out of his grain. That is profitable farming.

My hogs that die with cholera were nearly fat enough for the pork barrel, says a breeder. Eat all their lives, we suppose, that is in a diseased condition from the beginning.

When a horse begins to cough, run at the nose and have some gum, it is probably cold, and should be separated from the well horses. Wash twice with a three per cent. solution of carbolic acid, feed generously but not on fattening foods—and give a strong blood purifier.

Durable Hog Trough.

I send a drawing of a hog-trough which I find to be the best I have ever used. The wire is not in the way of throwing in the feed, as is the case where strips are nailed across the trough. The wire prevents the hogs from getting in the trough and keeps the trough from spreading. Use one piece two by six, and one two by eight, each nailed together, with ends nailed on the usual way. Take No. 9 or 2 wire and begin four inches from the end, one side, and staple securely; then draw the wire across angling to eight inches from the head of the trough on the other side, and so on. This gives each hog a space of eight inches.—D. H. West, in Farm and Fireside.

Hard on Yankee Farmer.

Do men learn by experience? Zimmer, the great German historian says they do not. Any man who has watched the course of the farmers of the United States for the past twenty years will readily see they do not. Last spring it was wet and backward and we used several of the dairymen in this vicinity to put in a crop of peas and oats, late sown, as a soiling crop, against the usual trough the latter part of August and September. They had been "burned up," as the saying goes, several times, had lost hundreds of dollars, each one of them, in milk shrinkage in past seasons. The cost in money and labor of putting in the peas and oats was trifling. This was their excuse for not doing this wise thing:

"We are going to have a wet season. Pasture will be plentiful. We will not need the soiling crop."

They had needed it sorely for several seasons. They had no reason to think they could tell what this season was going to be. But in face of their experience, as to previous seasons, in face of the great loss that had burned holes in their pockets, in face of the advantage a good soiling would be to them, they put it all aside for a mere supposition, a guess that it was going to be a wet season. The result was that the farmers of the United States for the past twenty years will readily see they do not. Last spring it was wet and backward and we used several of the dairymen in this vicinity to put in a crop of peas and oats, late sown, as a soiling crop, against the usual trough the latter part of August and September. They had been "burned up," as the saying goes, several times, had lost hundreds of dollars, each one of them, in milk shrinkage in past seasons. The cost in money and labor of putting in the peas and oats was trifling. This was their excuse for not doing this wise thing:

H. B. SHERWOOD, Superintendent

Wheeling and the Hearing.

An eminent Italian physician, anxious to observe the effect of tail-cutting on cyclists, recently examined twenty-four men who had ridden thirty-two miles in two hours and a quarter, and found that, with reference to the hearing, in nearly every instance it was defective, though it became normal again after two or three hours' rest.

Vast Output of Wine.

The vintage of California this year promises to reach 20,000,000 gallons, or 25 per cent. more than last season. About one-half of the grape crop has already been converted into wine. The growers are now receiving an advance of from $5 to $10 a ton for their grapes.

A Vegetarian Argument.

It is estimated that twenty-two acres of land is necessary to sustain one man on fresh meat. The same space of land if devoted to wheat culture would feed forty-two people; if to oats, eighty-eight; potatoes, Indian corn and rice, 176; and if to the plantain or bread-fruit tree, over 6000 people.

The Size of an Atlantic Fog.

The captain of a big Atlantic liner, after many calculations, has come to the conclusion that the general size of a fog in the Atlantic is about 30 miles in diameter.

Dairy Cow Rations.

At an Iowa institute one farmer stated that the following was his ideal ration for a creamery cow: Corn fodder, 16 pounds, ensilage 40 pounds, bran 6 pounds, corn meal 5 pounds, oil meal 2 pounds, hay 8 pounds. Condensing factories will not accept milk from cows which have been fed ensilage or buyers' grains. Another speaker stated that the separator and ensilage had increased his butter product 65 pounds per cow during the year, while still another said that his separator had added $12.50 per cow to his product and that he can raise the best calves from separator milk.

Feed the Pig Often.

Many a man would be surprised if he knew how many times a sow nurses her pigs during a day. There are two reasons for this: First, the sow is not able to retain her milk a long time; second, a pig has a small stomach and cannot store away a great quantity of food at one time. There is a natural lesson in this: In order to have pigs do well in an early age feed little but often, four times is better than three a day, especially if it is a sloppy or milk food.

THE HEART OF A MYSTERY

(COPYRIGHTED, 1897, BY CENTRAL PRESS AGENCY, TORONTO)

CHAPTER VI.

St. Mary's clock was chiming half-past seven when Ephraim Judd, suddenly turning the corner of a street on his way to the bank, all but ran against Peggy Lown. She was the very woman he was coming thus early to see. He wanted her to get the office floor washed before John Branker should arrive; but the sight of her white, scared face sent a sudden thrill of terror to his heart. Was anything suspected? Had anything been discovered? were his mental queries, thinking of himself alone.

"Oh, Mr. Judd, thank heaven I've met you!" cried Peggy, with a great gasp. "Run to the bank, sir. There's been murder—murder! Poor Mr. Hazeldine— But here Peggy caught sight of a policeman at the top of the street, and hurried off without a word more.

Mr. Hazeldine murdered! Ephraim Judd caught hold of a garden railing to keep himself from falling. For a moment or two the street and its houses faded away, and he was looking through the fanlight again, as on the previous night. A boy stopped and stared curiously at him; then Ephraim's wits came back. A few rapid strides brought him to the bank. One of the heavy doors was open, left so by Peggy Lown. Ephraim passed through, and made at once for Mr. Hazeldine's room. He took in the scene at a glance. Mrs. Sweet had had some water thrown over her, and showed signs of returning consciousness. Sweet himself, only partially dressed, was kneeling on one knee a foot or two away from the murdered man. He had tried to lift up the body, but had been compelled to let it drop again, and now he was staring at it as though he could not believe the evidence of his senses. A short distance away lay the knife—no one would touch that till the police arrived. And then Ephraim saw something else which Sweet in his perturbation had failed to notice; the iron door which opened into the strong room was partially open. Had there been robbery as well as murder?

Mr. Hazeldine was lying on his face, with one arm under his head, and the other outstretched, the hand of the latter being clenched as if in a spasm of mortal agony. Mr. Judd stooped and took hold of the hand; it was as cold as marble and apparently as senseless. No life was there.

"Oh, Mr. Judd, sir, what a sight is this!" cried Obed, while the tears streamed down his pudgy cheeks. Mr. Judd did not answer. He heard the policeman's heavy footfall, and next moment that functionary came in, accompanied by Peggy, and followed at a respectful distance by a crowd of some half-dozen people from the street, who felt sure that it must be a case of burkery at the least, and that, by good luck, there might perhaps be murder as well.

Mrs. Sweet was sitting up by this time, and staring round in a dazed sort of way. The sight of the constable roused her. She put her hands to her head and felt at her drenched cap and hair. "What a sight I must look! I wish I had my other cap on," was the first thought in her mind. Then she whipped off her apron and hid her saturated head-dress with it. It was the touch of comedy which is seldom absent from even the grimmest of human tragedies. The constable advanced without a word, and turned the body of the dead man over on its back. Mr. Hazeldine's vest was unbuttoned, the ends of his cravat were hanging loose, and his collar had apparently been torn by violence from the stud which had held it. His shirt-front had been cut by some sharp instrument just above the region of the heart, a small red patch marking the place.

"He's dead enough, poor gentleman," said he, with a shake of his head, as he let his fingers rest for a moment on Mr. Hazeldine's wrist. "But we shall have the doctor here in a minute or two."

Then he picked up the knife and examined it curiously. The eyes of all

In speaking thus of Mr. Branker, Ephraim had no ulterior motive, nor did it strike him at the time that his words might be the means of placing John in a very awkward position.

Two more constables had arrived by now. Mr. Mace planted one of them at the door of the strong room.

"Don't let anyone enter here without my permission," he said. The other man he sent in search of Mr. Branker, while Mr. Judd left the bank at the same time to break the news to Clement Hazeldine. At the doctor's wish Mrs. Sweet and Peggy had retired. They would be required later on, but at present they were only in the way.

"There seems to have been robbery here as well as murder," said Mr. Mace to Sweet. "I suppose you have no idea how it has all come about?"

Sweet had recovered his faculties in some measure by this time. Scarry though he was for Mr. Hazeldine, he yet felt that he himself must of necessity be a personage of some note for a considerable time to come. Now that he partly recovered from his first fright, he was beginning to swell with a sense of self-importance, and he proceeded to put on his most official air, and began to enter into a long, rambling statement which might have lasted for half an hour had he not been sharply pulled up.

"Tut-tut, man can't you answer a plain question in a few plain words?" said Mr. Mace, impatiently. "Do you, or do you not, know anything of this affair?"

"No, I don't," answered Sweet, shortly, and very red in the face.

"I thought as much," said Mr. Mace, dryly. "In these cases the person one would naturally expect to know the most is nearly sure to know the least. But, don't be afraid, my good man; you will have an opportunity of telling all you know before long. Meanwhile, the less you say the better, except when you are asked a question by those who have a right to know." Mr. Mace mounted a chair and examined the iron bars which protected the two windows of the office. There was nothing the matter with them. Evidently no entrance had been effected that way.

"And now you and I will take a little walk round the premises," said Mr. Mace to Obed; so away they went the latter ungraciously enough, although he was in a dreadful state of puzzle as to how anyone could possibly have made his way into the bank overnight, and left it again without his knowledge.

The front door was first of all examined, and afterwards the back door, which opened into a small paved yard shut in by a high wall protected by revolving iron spikes. There was nothing about either of them to show that they had been tampered with in any way. The two men went next into the general office, where everything seemed in its usual state, and from that they passed into the inner office. Here Mr. Mace's shifty eyes seemed drawn as if by instinct to the blood-stains on the floor.

"Ha! What are these? Who has been here?" he said.

"God bless my heart! I know no more about 'em than you do, sir!" cried Sweet, beginning once more to quake like a jelly.

"These are the marks of blood," said Mr. Mace, gravely. "And here are finger-marks of a similar kind outside this drawer."

"Why, that is one of Mr. Branker's drawers," said Sweet.

"One of Mr. Branker's drawers, hey? Does that gentleman keep any money in it, do you know?"

"Oh, no, sir; that's not one of the cash drawers; and besides, the money's all put away in the strong room at night."

Mr. Mace made a careful examination of the rest of the office, but discovered nothing further out of the ordinary way. He then locked the two doors that opened into the office, and put the keys in his pocket. He and Sweet were just crossing the corridor when John Branker, pale and breath-

"And you neither saw nor heard anything last night out of the ordinary way—nothing, in fact, to make you suspicious that anything was wrong?"

"Nothing whatever. I was as comfortable in my mind when I turned into bed between six and seven this morning as ever I was in my life."

"The inference would seem to be that the crime was committed between the hours of half-past ten and half-past eleven," said Mace. "But that is a point which will have to be inquired into more minutely later on." Then turning to John, he added, "You, Mr. Branker, will probably be able to tell us whether there has been any robbery here as well as murder," and beckoning him to follow, he led the way into the strong room.

CHAPTER VII.

"Yes, there has certainly been foul play here as well as in the other room," said John Branker, after a brief examination of the strong room. "In the first place, the twelve hundred pounds are gone which Mr. Hazeldine fetched from London yesterday, and I have no doubt that there were cash and notes to the amount of three or four thousands pounds in the safe, which also seem to be missing. The exact sum I cannot, of course, tell till I have examined the books. Of this safe, Mr. Hazeldine himself always kept the key. The other safes in the cellar are under my charge. I must at once send a telegram to Mr. Avison, who is staying for a few days in Paris on his way home."

"That's an ugly bruise, Mr. Branker, just above your left eye," said the chief constable, gazing straight into the other's face.

"Yes; it is the result of a little accident last night, answered John indifferently. "A woman flung a stone at me. I suppose I shall be disfigured for a few days; but it might have been worse."

"If you will step this way for a moment, there is something I should like to ask you about," said Mace, and with that he led the way to the inner office. Dr. Barton and Sweet bringing up the rear, Mace unlocked the door and they all went in. "Can you explain how those marks came there?" asked the constable, pointing to the stains on the floor.

"Good gracious, no!" cried John with a start. "I know no more about them than you do"—which was precisely the remark Sweet had given utterance to. "And there are more marks outside my drawer! What can it all mean?"

"It may, perhaps, be as well to open the drawer, if you have the key about you."

from the dead man to the weapon that had slain him. Fresh footsteps were heard outside, the crowd at the door divided for a moment, and in came Mr. Chief Constable Mace attended by one of his men and Dr. Barton.

The takers were driven out, and the front door was shut and bolted. The news had spread, and already some half-hundred people had assembled outside the bank. Those inside were waiting for the first words of Dr. Barton. Not long had they to wait.

"He has been dead for several hours, probably since midnight, or even earlier," was the verdict. Then he asked that a table might be brought in from some other room, and the body he laid upon it.

The knife was in Mr. Mace's possession by this time. He showed it to the doctor.

"Yes, it looks like it, but we shall know better before long," said the latter. He was taking off his coat and rolling up his shirt sleeves. Sweet, who was trembling like a jelly, had gone with one of the constables to fetch a coffin.

"It seems to me as if there has been some foul play here," said Dr. Barton, looking at the knife. "The blade is in the right position, and the wound is a fatal one."

"You know the premises, Mr. Judd," said Mace. "Suppose you and I have a look."

The strong room was in darkness except for a sickly gleam of daylight which penetrated through the small grated opening in the outer wall, but Ephraim struck a match and lighted the gas. The door of one of the three iron safes, the one in which bullion was always kept, was wide open. Apparently the safe had been rifled. Scattered about the floor were a number of documents, large or four empty cashboxes, and some books. There, too, open and empty, lay the black leather bag which had contained the twelve hundred pounds brought by Mr. Hazeldine from London the previous afternoon.

"It looks as if somebody had been here that had no right to," said Mr. Mace.

"It does, indeed," assented Ephraim. "I think we ought to have Mr. Branker here as soon as possible."

"Right you are; and there's the poor gentleman's relations to be told. Who's to do that?"

"I will go and break the news to Mr. Clement, who's the doctor—if you like, and then he can tell the others."

"Do so, please; and could you not call on Mr. Branker at the same time?"

"He lives in an opposite direction. One of your men might fetch him in ten minutes. By-the-by, I shouldn't be a bit surprised if Mr. B. was the last person who saw the Governor alive."

"Ah; in that case the sooner we have him here the better. But what reason have you for saying so?"

"Why, I met him about half-past ten last night on his way to the bank. He said that he was coming to fetch his umbrella, but he may have seen Mr. H. at the same time."

"Um. Well, we shall hear what he has to say when he arrives."

"No doubt Sweet can tell you more of the matter than I can."

"This terrible tale, that I have just heard, cannot be true Mr. Mace," he said.

"Only too true, I am sorry to say," Mr. Branker. Come and see for yourself," answered the chief constable, and led the way into Mr. Hazeldine's office.

The body had been covered with a sheet and Doctor Barton was in the act of putting on his overcoat. He shook hands with Mr. Branker, whom he had known for years. John's glance traveled from the table with its terrible burden to the doctor's face, and then tears rushed to his eyes. It seemed all like a hideous dream.

"We can do no more at present," said the doctor to Mr. Mace. "There will have to be a post-mortem, of course; but that, I apprehend, will merely serve to verify what we know pretty well already. The tissue of the heart has doubtless been punctured by some sharp instrument—probably by the knife in your possession—and death must have been almost instantaneous."

"But who can have done it?" asked John, in a stupor of horror and grief. He lifted a corner of the sheet and gazed for a moment on the blackened face, and then he turned away with a shudder, and left the room. The door was shut, and the impression of seeing the body lay in his mind.

"That's just what we would all like to know," answered Mr. Mace dryly. "There was a light in his office when I called for my umbrella about half-past ten," said John.

"But did you see Mr. Hazeldine, and speak to him at that time?" asked Mace.

"No, I never saw him at all yesterday evening. He did not get back from London till late, and I would not disturb him."

"Then it must have been you, sir, that I heard going out about that time," said Sweet.

"Most probably. I let myself in with my pass-key, found my umbrella in the dark, and was out of the bank again in three minutes."

"And I came upstairs when I heard the door bang, thinking it was Mr. Hazeldine who had gone," said Sweet. "I opened the office door and saw him sitting there in his chair. I shall not be done for about half an hour yet," says he. "I will let myself out when I'm ready. You needn't trouble any more, Sweet. So with that I went, leaving him sitting there. Little did I think—"

"Never mind what you thought, tell us what happened next," said Mr. Mace.

"What happened next was that I went downstairs and got my supper," responded Sweet, with a resentful glance at the chief constable. "After that I sat and had a pipe, waiting to hear Mr. Hazeldine go, that I might lock up for the night. I was puzzled with his fidgeting, and rubbed his nose."

"But you never heard him go, hey?" queried Mace.

"No, I never heard him go. I waited till half-past eleven, and then I went upstairs again."

"Perhaps you had a little snooze meanwhile," said Mace, insinuatingly.

"Me go to sleep when I'm on duty?" exclaimed Sweet, with an indignant sniff. "No, sir, I'm not one of that sort, and nobody ever hinted at such a thing before."

"I am glad to hear it. But tell us what happened when you came upstairs for the second time."

"Not caring to disturb Mr. Hazeldine again if he was still there, I peeped through the keyhole to see whether there was a light, but I couldn't see one. Still, to make sure, I knocked, but there was no answer, so I opened the door and looked in. Everything was in darkness; the gas was out and the fire was out. Says I to myself, 'He's gone,' and with that I locked the door on the outside, feeling sure that everything was right."

"But ought not the fact of your not having heard Mr. Hazeldine leave the premises have caused you to suspect that something was wrong?"

"Mr. Hazeldine was a very quiet gentleman. He would shut the front door and make hardly any noise about it."

"Mr. Branker here, begging his pardon for saying so, generally bangs the door after him."

"What did you do when you found, as you thought, that Mr. Hazeldine was gone?"

"I did what I always do—I put out the gas in the lobby and fastened up the front door for the night, and then went the rest of my rounds to see that everything was all right."

"How often in the course of the night are you supposed to go your rounds?"

"Once every hour; and I'm not only

John produced his bunch of keys at once. "This is the one," he said, handing the bunch to Mace. "Perhaps you had better open the drawer yourself."

The constable took the key and opened the drawer. The books and papers were marked here and there with drops of blood. John stared as he had never stared before. "Someone has been here to a certainty," he said. The books and papers have been disturbed, and as for those stains—" He was too agitated to say more.

"And yet the lock does not seem to have been tampered with," said Mace, with his keen eyes again fixed on John's face.

"It's all a mystery, and I can throw no light on it whatever," answered the latter.

"Can you call to mind the last occasion of your having to open the drawer?"

"It was when I put my papers away last evening before leaving; that would be sometime between eight and nine o'clock."

"Then you did not open the drawer when you came back to the bank at half-past ten?"

"No, I had no occasion to do so. I did not even light the gas, though I had found my umbrella in the dark. I was not more than two minutes in the office."

"I shall have to keep this office locked up till the jury have visited it," said Mace. "I have no doubt the coroner will be able to sit this afternoon."

John looked at him for a moment, as though he hardly understood his meaning; then, following Mace's lead, they all left the office, the door of which was carefully relocked. They had just got back to the other office when Clement Hazeldine rushed in, white and breathless.

"Although lame, Ephraim Judd, with the assistance of his stick, could get over the ground as quickly as most people, and it did not take him many minutes to reach Clement Hazeldine's door. Clem lodged with the widow of the practitioner to whose business he had succeeded. He was still in bed when Ephraim knocked, having been attending a patient till four a.m.; but the summons sent upstairs was so peremptory that he lost no time in coming down. In what words Ephraim told his terrible tidings he never afterwards knew; it is sufficient that they were told."

"What about your brother?" asked Ephraim, as soon as Clement seemed in some degree to be recovering from the shock. "Ought he not to know as soon as possible?"

"Will you please go and tell him, Mr. Judd, while I go down to the bank? There's my mother and sister, too; but Edward must break the news to them. It seems impossible that it can be true—impossible to think that I shall never see my poor father alive again! What wretch's hand has done this deed?"

Beecham, the suburb of Ashdown, where Edward Hazeldine lived, was a clear mile and a half away. Ephraim would have hired a fly, but there was none to be had at that early hour. He was far from being easy in his mind as he walked along. It was almost a certainty that during his absence Mr. Mace would discover the blood-stains on the office floor, and Ephraim felt terribly afraid lest, by some means or other they should be traced back to him. He did not well see how they could be, but his conscience made a coward of him. He had taken away the knife that had cut his hand, and it was now locked in his trunk at home, while the cut itself, although it had bled a good deal at the time, had not proved a severe one. It was in the palm of the hand, and he had covered it with a little gold-beater's skin to keep the air out. He made a mental note that on no account must Mr. Mace's eyes be permitted to discover the wound.

Edward Hazeldine was an early riser. While breakfasting, he made a point of running through his correspondence. It was a saving of valuable time. He had just sat down to the table with his heap of letters before him, when Mr. Judd was announced. Edward, who knew that Ephraim was employed at the bank, leaped in a moment to the conclusion that his visitor could only be the bearer of ill news, and on a glance at the latter's grave face was enough to assure him that such was the case.

"My father—what is amiss?" he said, as he started to his feet.

Then Ephraim had to break the same news to him that he had already broken to his brother. Edward's face blanched and his eyes filled with horror as the tale was told.

"My father murdered!—he who never harmed a creature in his life!"

Then he bowed his head on his hands, and there was silence in the room for a little while.

But Edward Hazeldine was a man of any other remedy. If you want pure blood and good health take time was for him next to an impossibility. Presently he lifted his head, wiped his eyes, and rang the bell. To the servant who came in, he said, "Order the mare to be put in the dog-cart and brought round as soon as possible." Then to Ephraim he would drive over to the bank to see soon as I have given certain directions to my clerk."

Left alone for a few minutes, Ephraim glanced with curiosity round the handsomely furnished room. He had never been inside Edward Hazeldine's house before. Then his eyes wandered to the breakfast tray, and the little heap of post-letters lying beside it. As has been said already, other people's letters always had an irresistible fascination for Mr. Judd. If he could not see the inside of a letter, he would rather see the outside than not see it at all. His long, thin fingers slid and opened automatically. He had risen from his chair, and one hand went out toward the table. His big ears were on the alert for the slightest sound, and he was waiting for the letter to be handed to him.

He ran them quickly through, noting the post-mark of each, and the handwriting of the addresser. Evidently they were chiefly business communications. But over one of them he paused, looking at it this way and that some half-dozen times.

"I could almost swear that this was the poor Governor's hand. Only disguised a bit," he muttered. "Posted in London yesterday, too! That 'C' is certainly his, and so is that 'h.' It's his writing, I would wager anything. Now, what could he possibly have to write Mr. Edward about yesterday that he could not tell him to-day? I would give something to know what's inside."

But at the juncture he heard Edward Hazeldine's door heavy tread outside. The letters were replaced on the table, and three minutes later the two men were on their way to the bank.

Edward Hazeldine got back home about two o'clock. Never would he be able to forget what he had gone through that forenoon. On him, the elder son, had devolved the duty of breaking the tragic news to his mother and sister. Mrs. Hazeldine had fainted, and Fanny had gone into hysterics. The scene had tried him almost beyond endurance.

The jury had been summoned for three o'clock that afternoon. As Edward could be of no further service at present, he had made his escape. He fervently hoped that at the corner would not think it needful to call him as a witness. Everything at present was conjecture and vague surmise. So far, the police seemed to be without any clue to the perpetrator of the crime.

Edward had not been home more than a few minutes when Lord Estree was announced.

His lordship was one of two sleeping partners in the brewery, having about ten thousand pounds invested in the concern. He was on excellent terms with Edward, of whose business abilities he had a very high opinion. His home for the last parts of the year was at Seaham Lodge, a splendid property some four or five miles from Beecham. His family were all grown up; the daughters married, and the sons out in the world; but with himself and his wife, as companion to her ladyship, there world; but with himself and his wife, lived a distant kinswoman, Miss Winton, by name, whom Edward Hazeldine had secretly made up his mind to win for his wife, if it were anyhow possible for him to do so. Miss Winton was thirty years old, and plain looking, but accomplished and amiable; and had, moreover, a fortune of fifteen thousand pounds in her own right. Edward, who had frequent occasion to visit the lady on matters of business, and who was generally asked to stay for luncheon or dinner, as the case might be, had as yet ventured to whisper no word of love in Miss Winton's ear; but there may have been that in his looks and manner which afforded her some inkling of the state of affairs. If such were the case, her treatment of Edward was not of a kind to lead him to fear that when the time should have come for him to urge his suit, he would be very hardly treated. He told himself that he would wait till after Christmas; till the year's balance at the brewery should have been struck. Business was going up by leaps and bounds, and he wanted to secure not merely Miss Winton's approval of his suit, but the Earl's as well, and he knew that nothing would put the latter into such a good humor as the assurance of a thumping dividend on his investment in the brewery.

came hurriedly into the room and held out his hand to the other. "Surely, surely there can be no truth in it."
 He was a fresh, podgy, sand-haired man, with a fresh complexion and a tip-tilted nose, and looked far more like a retired tradesman than a "belly-earl." In one respect, indeed he would have made a first-rate tradesman; in him the commercial instinct was very strongly developed, and half his time was given to the consideration of schemes by means of which his large income might be made larger still.
 "My father was murdered last night, if that is the rumor to which your lordship refers," answered Edward, with a little break in his voice.
 The Earl sat down and stared at the other for a full half minute without speaking. Then he said, "If not too painful to you, I should like you to tell me such particulars of the affair as are already known."
 This Edward proceeded to do as briefly as possible:
 "It is terrible—terrible!" ejaculated the Earl. I need scarcely say, my dear Hazeldine, that you have my most unfeigned sympathy—both you and your mother—in this dreadful affliction. How little we know what a sulted gave me to understand that, with great care, I might live for some time to come, but that there was a possibility of my being taken off at any moment. Rest and perfect quiet were essential to my case, and a complete release from the cares and worries of business—all of which you will say might have been mine had I so willed it—and indeed it is quite true that I might have retired to some restful spot, and there, far from the maddening crowd, have eked out the poor remainder of my days, but for certain circumstances which rendered such a step an impossibility. What those circumstances were, I will now tell you.

 "Edward, from youth upward I have been a gambler—a secret gambler—but so well have I kept the knowledge to myself that not even your mother has known of it, whatever she may have suspected. When I was a school-boy I used to gamble for halfpence. When I grew older I was in the habit of venturing my half-crowns, and afterwards my sovereigns, on this race or the other. When I was a young man, and supposed to be taking my autumn holidays in Scotland or at the seaside, I generally contrived to find my way to Doncaster for

In carrying out this desperate resolve I am merely anticipating the end of a life which no power on earth could prolong for many months, and which might go out like the snuff of a candle at any moment. The proceeds of my policy of insurance will be saved to my family, my fair fame will remain untainted, the world will respect my memory as that of a man just and honorable in all his dealings, while those I leave behind me will have no cause to blush for the name they bear.
 "Such being the case, why have I chosen to make you my confidant in this matter? Why have I imposed upon you the burthen of such a confession? Why have I not let you live on in ignorance, as your brother will live on in his? I will tell you why.
 "Notwithstanding all the precautions I shall take to obviate so untoward a result, it is just possible that my death may be laid at the door of some innocent person. Many a guiltless man has been done to death by circumstantial evidence, and such a thing might easily happen again. I charge you, therefore, as my eldest son, that in the event of anyone being accused of my death, you at once make public such facts as will suffice to free him from so heinous a charge. Better, a thousand times better, that the whole truth should be told, than that the accusation of being a murderer should cling to anyone for an hour! I lay upon you this most solemn duty, being perfectly satisfied that I could entrust it into no better hands. My fervent hope, however, is that no such contingency may arise. Should it do so, your duty will be plainly before you, and I feel satisfied that you will not shrink from doing it.
 "And now, what shall I say more? I dare not write one-twentieth part of that which I feel, for fear I should break down; and I need all the strength I can summon to my aid to go through the ordeal before me. You will continue to be what you have always been—a good son and a good brother. You will treat your father's memory in your thoughts as leniently as you can. I have been weak, foolish—criminal even; but had fortune smiled on my schemes, all this would have remained unknown, even to you. I should have lived and died prosperous and respected, and the local newspaper, in its obituary notice, would have attributed to me half the virtues under the sun. But should the world ever come to know that which I have here revealed to you, then the colors it would paint me in would be black indeed."
 "I can write no more.
 "Farewell, a long farewell.
 "Your unhappy father,
 "JAMES HAZELDINE."

Edward Hazeldine was still sitting with his father's open letter in his hand, in a maze of grief, shame and perplexity, when there came a knock at his office door. He put the letter carefully out of sight, and then said, "Come in." A servant entered.
 "If you please, sir, the coroner has sent for you, and you are wanted immediately."
 The coroner and jury had met in a room of the "White Lion Hotel," a house not more than two or three hundred yards from the bank. The twelve good men and true were either tradesmen or private householders of the town, all of whom had known, and most of them had done business with, the late Mr. Hazeldine.
 After viewing the body, which still lay in the room where it had been found, the jury went back to the hotel. The proceedings were watched by Mr. Prestwich, solicitor, retained by Mr. Edward Hazeldine, on behalf of the relatives of the deceased. Mr. Mace and three of his men were in attendance.
 The first witness called was Clement Hazeldine, who identified the body of the deceased as that of his father.
 The next witness was John Branker, who deposed to deceased having left the bank during the forenoon of the previous day, with the intention of going to London to change notes to the amount of about twelve hundred pounds for gold. When he left the bank he took with him the black bag which was always made use of on such occasions. It was not often, witness went on to say, that Mr. Hazeldine himself went to London to obtain changes; that was a duty which more frequently devolved upon his witness; still, it sometimes happened that deceased had his business to transact in town in which case he would bring back the gold himself.
 David Mason, the railway booking-clerk, deposed to having sold deceased a first-class return ticket to London and back by the ten-thirty train on the previous day.
 Obed Sweet, night-watchman, deposed to the events as detailed in a previous chapter: To seeing Mr. Hazeldine enter the bank about half-past eight

It isn't much trouble for a really healthy man to be good humored.

Jollity and exuberant health are a proverbial combination. The healthy man who is always laughing doesn't have any trouble with his digestion. It has been said that laughing makes people healthy. The truth is that health makes people laugh.

It is impossible to estimate the tremendous influence of health upon human character. A man with a headache will not be in a happy, contented frame of mind. A man who suffers from a weak stomach and an impaired digestion will sit and grumble through the best meal ever prepared. A bilious man who is not a bore, is deserving of a place in a museum. A nervous man who is not petulant and fault-finding is a curiosity. All these conditions lead to grave diseases, when the victim becomes not only disagreeable, but dependent as well. A wise wife will realize that while the old saying that a "man's heart is in his stomach," is not literally true, it is a fact that his stomach sweetens or soures his character according as it is healthy or unhealthy. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best of medicines for the conditions described. It makes the weak stomach strong, the impaired digestion perfect, invigorates the liver, purifies and enriches the blood and tones the nerves. It tears down half-dead, inert tissues and replaces them with the firm muscular tissues of health. It builds new and healthy nerve fibres and brain cells. It dissipates nervousness and melancholy and imparts mental elasticity and courage. It is the best of all known medicines for nervous disorders.

"Through your skillful treatment I am once more a well man," writes J. N. Arnold, Esq., of Gandy, Logan Co., Neb. "I suffered for years and could not find relief until I commenced taking your 'Golden Medical Discovery.' I suffered with constipation and torpidity of liver which resulted in irritation of the prostate and inflammation of the bladder. I had only taken one bottle when I found great relief. The medicine has effected a permanent cure."

BILLY'S GETTING OLD.

Billy once was widely envied
 By his fellow men;
 Handsome Billy spent his money
 Very freely then;
 Now his following has dwindled,
 Since he hoards his gold,
 And he goes to church on Sundays—
 Billy's getting old!

Billy used to be the greatest
 Ladies' man in town;
 Billy's gorgeous entertainments
 Won him wide renown;
 Billy used to have a figure
 Graceful to behold,
 Now he stoops his knees as shaky—
 Billy's getting old!

Off in former days we've seen him
 With his bloodied pair,
 And some flattening one beside him,
 Radiantly fair!
 Now his chin rests on his breast in
 Many a flabby fold,
 And his coachman holds the ribbons—
 Billy's getting old!

There were suppers for sweet singers
 And merry dances in town;
 There were yacht rides, he was captain
 And fair women formed his crew;
 But the suppers and the frolics
 On the deck and in the hold
 Serve no longer to amuse him—
 Billy's getting old!

Yesterday I saw him driving
 Out to get the air;
 No gay woman sat beside him,
 Radiantly fair;
 Over his eye a dim had gathered,
 On his hair the mold
 That relentless Time spreads over—
 Billy's getting old!

Once his faithful wife was lonely,
 Others claimed his suit;
 She was left to think and ponder
 Over woman's wiles,
 But today her breast is laden
 With a joy untold
 He has drifted back into her—
 Billy's getting old!

SHE NEVER MADE MISTAKES.

But Nevertheless She Went Straightway to Another Place

She was a fine, distinguished-looking woman, with beautiful gray hair and eyes that spoke the brilliancy of her mind. There were lines about her chin, however, that easily indicated the firmness of her decision when once her mind was settled on any given point.

All these things were apparent when she walked into the Chinese laundry office, and, handing a queerly-marked slip of paper to the almond-eyed celestial behind the counter, gently asked for her shirtwaists.

Another Rumor.

The Toronto World of Tuesday contains the following paragraph: The local detectives are looking for four men for whose capture a liberal reward is offered. The men are wanted for robbing a bank at Elton, Iowa, and many other burglaries. It is supposed that they are also responsible for three safe robberies at Sarnia last July, and they are also suspected of being concerned in the Napanee bank robbery, as they were in that neighborhood when it occurred. The fugitives are: Samuel J. Pitohie, alias Sam Scott, an ex-saloon-keeper, who is considered an expert at safe-blowing; Joseph Menaud, also known as "Little Joe" and "the Indian," a French-Canadian, with a scar on his forehead; Robert Durkin, alias Murray, the oldest man in the party, who belongs to Toronto, and Donald Cameron, alias "Red" Cameron, a tall, slick gambler, who frequents country fairs and circuses.

Circled the Globe.

At the time that Mr. Herrington despatched his jubilee post card on its trip around the world via San Francisco, Mr. Harvey Warner despatched a similar card via London, England. The card left Napanee on June 30th and arrived back on Nov. 12th after having circled the globe. It bears evidence of having had a hot time on its voyage and the postal authorities were liberal with ink in stamping it. The original address is obliterated. In addition to the Canadian postage stamps it now contains Japanese, Siam and Italian stamps. It also bears the signatures, and dates of arrival, of the British consuls at Rome, Italy, Bangkok, Siam and Tokio, Japan. Mr. Herrington's card was an easy winner in the race having a lead of twelve days. All of which goes to show that if you intend to make a jubilee post card of yourself and go around the world you can lap twelve days off the journey by going via San Francisco.

Mr. Pepler Honored.

A dispatch from Guelph says: "Mr. A. Pepler, who has been in charge of the Dominion Bank here for the past five years, and has recently been promoted to the management of the branch at Napanee, was entertained on the 9th inst. at a dinner at the Priory Club by some 30 of the leading business men and merchants of the city. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. M. Duff, manager of the Bank of Commerce, and the vice-chair by Mr. Hugh McMillan, barrister. Mr. Pepler replied to the toast of "Our Guest," and regretted that he had to leave Guelph, where he and Mrs. Pepler had made so many friends and acquaintances. Speeches were made by Mr. D. Guthrie, Q.C., Col. Macdonald, Q.C., Dr. McKinnon, John Mitchell, A. L. Dunbar, Mr. Staunton (Mr. Pepler's successor) and a number of others, expressive of their regret at Mr. Pepler's departure. Mr. and Mrs. Pepler left to day for Napanee, and take with them the well-wishes of numerous friends of Guelph.

Return of the Hunters.

Messrs. W. H. Hunter, W. Light and Thos. Symington returned from their hunting trip in the back country on Friday night. They brought back with them as trophies of the chase two fine deer, a couple of antlers, and a nice box of speckled trout. They had a real enjoyable time and may possibly charter a special train to bring in the balance of their game. On the mountains, about twenty miles back of Plevna, there was a foot of snow when they left on Friday. "Our Lady of the Snows" is no doubt camping back there, feasting on venison.

Ladies, He is Coming.

When bodily tired, a sleep is refreshing, but when that tired feeling is felt through dissatisfaction with one's personal appearance sleep is not the remedy to employ. The hair plays an important part in this respect. Thousands wear these goods with satisfaction, you can be benefited likewise.

Three Days in The Woods.

Wm. Miller, of Napanee, had an experience while deer hunting in North Addington last week that he will remember until his dying day. One morning he went to see a friend to transact business, but he was away from home. He was directed to where he was and he started through the woods for the spot. He lost his way. The first night he built a fire and walked about it. Next day he sought for a clearing but only found an old shanty. The third day he wandered around and again took shelter in the shanty. The fourth day he could not get out as he was too weak for lack of food to move. That day his friends discovered him and he was nourished. Mr. Miller was three days and four nights without food and had a very narrow squeak for his life.

A Sudden Death.

It is with regret we have to announce the death of Mr. Daly Thomas, an old and respected resident of Odessa. Mr. Thomas was in the village on Saturday afternoon and got up on Sunday morning and proceeded to do his usual morning's work. On his return to the house he partook of breakfast and laid himself down on a couch. His wife came to him and requested him to shave himself. He immediately jumped up, and fell down dead. Mrs. Thomas was alone with him in the house. Much sympathy is felt for her and the family in their bereavement.

Gentlemen, Does Your Bald Head Make You susceptible to Cold?

Just think of how quickly the lost hair can be replaced. Prof. Dorenwend can do it in five minutes and do it so perfectly that no falseness is recognizable. Leading citizens everywhere are wearing them and none would be without one. If you are partly or wholly bald you are making a big mistake if you neglect to get one of these art hair coverings, they are not to be compared to old fashion wigs, that some would be wig-makers construct. Prof. Dorenwend's skill in this line is unprecedented and he invites you to call for a practical demonstration at Paisley House, Napanee, on Thursday December 2nd.

Reduced in Price.

The Globe, Toronto, has reduced the price of its morning edition from $6 to $4, and discontinued the second edition. The Globe seldom does things by halves, and this is certainly a strong and deserving bid for circulation. In the announcement of the change it is stated that the great reduction in the price of paper and the introduction of typesetting machines have made this possible, but, considering the great expense that they incur in their efforts to secure all the news every day and the exceedingly fair reports that they give of all important events, $6 per year was not too much to pay. At $4 per year their circulation should soon reach the 50,000 mark, especially as all the departments, including their excellent Saturday illustrated edition, are to be kept up to their present high standard. The Globe is generally recognized as the leading paper in Canada, and their effort to make it possible for every person to take it regularly should meet with a hearty response.

They Should Be Punished.

Blackmail is very common in Kingston. It is said that two prominent men who were friendly with other men's wives had to put up $1,000 within the present month as "hush" money. Men in poor circumstances conspire with their wives to blackmail men, reported to have money. The other day a Kingston man, who owed his landlord $100 for rent, hit upon the following plan to liquidate the claim. He invited the property owner to call at his house on a certain date when he agreed to pay him the rent. He arranged matters so that he would have another man in the house when the landlord called. When he saw the landlord coming he and his friend retired to a shed to inspect a horse. The wife of the tenant received the visitor, and as soon as she saw him, she fainted. He assisted her to a sofa, and then she seized him by the neck and yelled. Her husband and companion ran in and caught the man with the woman's arms around his neck. He was tackled and knocked down. He then became penitent, and forgave the man his rent of $100 and promised to pay $500 in cash besides. He was kept a prisoner in the house until after the money was drawn from the bank and paid over to the tenant. The landlord was then allowed to go.

The fall assizes will open before Chief Justice Meredith, at the court house here, on Monday. The docket is the lightest for many years, and there is but one jury case, in the civil actions, that of Fitchett vs. Mellow. A very interesting ceremony was celebrated on Tuesday morning at nine o'clock in St. James' church, when Rev. J. K. Macmorine, rector, assisted by Rev. A. L. Geen, Belleville, united in marriage Miss Jessie Agnes Phippen, daughter of S. S. Phippen, ex-secretary and treasurer of the public school board, and Rev. R. S. Forneri, rural dean of Lennox and Addington, and rector of the parish of Adolphustown. The bride was attired in a travelling gown of dark green, and was assisted by her sister, Miss Katie Phippen, who wore a costume of grey cloth. Rev. A. L. Geen assisted the groom as well as taking part in the service. The bride entered the church leaning upon the arm of her cousin, W. N. Linton, who took her father's place at the altar. The only guests were immediate relatives. After the ceremony Rev. R. S. and Mrs. Forneri drove to the Grand Trunk station and took a train westward for a honeymoon tour. Returning ten days hence they will take up their residence at the rectory, Adolphustown. The bride was well known in musical circles, having been a member of the choir in St. James' church for a number of years, and assisting in concerts in the city and vicinity for a long period. She was always a favorite that was in demand. She was one of the best workers in St. James' congregation and took an active part in every movement having for its object the advancement of the interests of the church. It is not surprising, therefore, that on the eve of her wedding she should be waited on by the rector and a number of the workers, who on behalf of the appreciative congregation, presented Miss Phippen with a handsome silver tea service, accompanied by a complimentary address in which the loss the church sustained by the departure of so valued a worker was set forth, as well as wishing the recipient every success in her new field of labor. At the ceremony this morning the entire choir turned out to assist in the service. The congregation will hereafter greatly miss the sweet voice of one whose face they have long been accustomed to see in the choir stalls.—Kingston Whig.

Hunt Club Dinner.

Mr. W. H. Hunter, the genial proprietor of the Royal Hotel, inaugurated the Royal Hotel Hunt Club Dinner on Monday evening last and all present voted it a decided success and hoped it would blossom out into an annual affair. Mr. Hunter has been out in the back country chasing the elusive deer for the past two weeks and on his return he decided to entertain a number of his friends to a dinner at the Royal. When Harry essays a thing its success is assured and the dinner provided was indeed a royal repast, fit for the gods. The dinner and the manner in which it was served reflects great credit on the ladies of the house and we feel that we cannot do better than append the bill of fare:

Over sixty sat down to partake of Mr. Hunter's munificence and due justice was done to the good things provided. The gathering embraced the members of the town council, and a number of the prominent business men of the town. But two toasts were proposed. The Queen and Our Host, which Mr. W. S. Herrington did in a neat speech, and they were both heartily received. Mr. Hunter responded briefly, expressing his pleasure at their company and thanking them for their attendance. The absence of post-prandial addresses was looked upon by many as a pleasing feature of the evening. The assemblage dispersed about 12 o'clock, all vowing Harry "a jolly good fellow."

playing near the creek when suddenly the little tot fell into the water face downward. The dog seized her by the sleeve, turned her over and pulled her to the bank. He then took her by the dress and dragged her toward the house, stopping every little way to send up shrill barks in order to notify the mother, and thus obtain the aid he could not render the insensible child. Mrs. Smith, on running to the spot found her child's mouth, nose, eyes and hair full of black mud from the bed of the stream. Pearl recovered in a short time, and she and her dog are now more inseparable companions than ever. It is needless to say that this dog will feed on dainties.—Bangor Times.

N. C. I. Concert

The N. C. I. Athletic Society's concert in the assembly hall of the Collegiate on Friday evening last was a pronounced success. Mr. F. W. French made a highly acceptable chairman. The presentation of the prizes won on the annual day of sports proved an interesting feature of the evening. The presentations were made by Rev. W. W. Peck, Rev. Dr. Crothers, Rev. C. Parker, and H. M. Deroche, Q. C. Each made humorous appropriate and pointed addresses which were well received. Maurice Walsh, the boy elocutionist, merited all the good words said of him and his various selections elicited rounds of applause. Mrs. F. E. Vanluven sang in her usual pleasing manner and Miss Crother's selection on the violin was highly appreciated. Miss Templeton rendered an instrumental solo in an able manner and Mr. Jewell rendered a fine solo. The Athletic Society wish to express their thanks to those who so ably contributed to the programme.

Want a Poor House.

The town council held their regular meeting on Monday evening and had quite an interesting time of it. Reeve Leonard occupied the chair, and in the charmed circle Boyle, Dey, Alexander, Ming, Carson, Miller, Lowry and Aylsworth were seated. After the minutes of the last regular meeting were confirmed a deputation, consisting of U. Wilson, M. P., Jas. Daly, P. M., S. Gibson, Dr. Bissonnette, Mrs. A. W. Grange, Mrs. W. Embury, Mrs. F. Burrows, Mrs. W. T. Gibbard, and Mrs. Wm. Templeton invaded the council chamber and were heard in reference to the formation of the Benevolent Society. Mr. U. Wilson, M. P., introduced the deputation in a few well chosen words. Mr. James Daly then addressed the council in reference to the object of the society, and urged the necessity for the erection of a poor house. He stated that at every session of the assizes the judges complained at the practice of committing vagrants and paupers to gaol and he had no doubt that in the near future the practice would be stopped by legislation. The government granted $4,000 as an inducement for counties to erect Houses of Refuge, but if it were made compulsory to erect them this privilege would no doubt be withdrawn. In other counties Houses of Refuge had been made self sustaining. Mrs. A. W. Grange addressed the council on the details of work proposed to be done by the society and urged on the council to give substantial assistance to further the success of the project. Mr. S. Gibson also favored the erection of a poor house. He dealt with the proposed work of the society. Each ward would look after its own poor. A committee of five, one of whom acted as convener, would have charge of the work in each ward and they were to investigate and report all cases brought to their attention. To be a success the society should work in conjunction with the Poor and Sanitary Committee of the council. Dr. Bissonnette was of the opinion that a poor house would prove a paying institution. Deputy Reeve Madole and Couns. Aylsworth and Alexander favored the views of the committee. Mr. Aylsworth thought the council should give the matter due consideration and it would be a good idea for the council to attend the meeting of the Benevolent Society in a body on Friday evening. Council then adjourned until Wednesday evening.

The parties live in South Fredericksburgh. U. M. Wilson, for the pltf., G. F. Rutlan, for defendants.

Doller vs. Doller—An action to set aside the will of the late Louis F. Doller of North Fredericksburgh. This case was set down for last assizes but was not tried. Thos. B. German for the pltf., English & Perry, Deroche & Madden, and Clute, Williams & Morden for defendants.

Light vs. Hawley—An action for damages for wrongfully depriving the plaintiff of certain goods and chattels. It appears that John Conger made an assignment to Sheriff Hawley. Previous to this Conger had given a chattel mortgage to T. E. Anderson, who assigned said mortgage to Jos. Light, the plaintiff. The Sheriff took possession of some of the goods in this chattel mortgage and sold them, and this action is brought to recover damages for selling these goods. Edglish & Perry for plaintiff, W. G. Wilson, for defendant.

OBITUARY.

MATHEW LOCHHEAD.

Mathew Lochhead was born in the Township of North Marysburgh, Prince Edward County, Nov. 19th, 1820 and passed away from this life at Newburgh on Oct. 15th., 1895. He was first married in early life to Miss Rachel Martin and nine children blessed their union, most of whom have passed over the bourne of time. In later life he was again married to Miss Elizabeth Asseltine who remains to mourn his loss. Brother Lochhead was soundly converted more than half a century ago in a remarkable revival held at Selby (the home of his first wife) and joining the Wesleyan church remained a faithful member of Methodism until death. He was well-known and esteemed as an obliging citizen and consistent christian man in the wide circle of his acquaintances at Marysburgh, Richmond, Centreville, etc. The church remembers and honors him as a useful class leader, a sweet gospel singer and powerful in prayer and exhortation. He was almost entirely confined to his home for the past year because of feeble physical and mental health. He fell asleep having served his generation and in great peace passed to his reward.

CURRENCY.

Some time ago the Toronto World announced that J. & L. Taylor would give wards and wondering what struck it.

PERSONALS.

Mrs. M. T. Rogers has returned to town for a few days.

Church of England Notes.

$1,000 to any man who could master the combination of one of their burglar proof safes. A subscriber, who is interested in Taylor's burglar proof safes, asks us to inquire of the World if any one of the combination experts mentioned by it accepted Mr. Taylor's offer. If not will the World kindly urge upon them to do so as the subscriber is anxious to know if he should keep his valuables in his safe or carry them in his sock.

Talking about safes, was the one in the Express Office at Trenton burglar proof? If so some one of the employees of that corporation must have betrayed the trust reposed in him and helped himself to the company's money.

On the face of it it looks like an impossibility to open a four wheeled burglar proof safe without a knowledge of the combination. Still we are told that this feat has been accomplished. Men with acute hearing and a highly developed sense of touch can manipulate any combination, it is alleged. We are even told stories of convicts from the penitentiary being secured to open safes the combinations of which had been forgotten or lost.

If there are men in the penitentiary who can work combinations the Government should grant them an opportunity of demonstrating it. It would clear up the doubt that exists and Taylor's $1,000 would help the convict to lead an honest life when he regained his liberty.

A Mr. Clarry has brought action against the Grand Trunk Railway. He bought a ticket from Harrisburg to Stratford, via Galt and Berlin. When he got to Galt he found he would have to take a bus from one G. T. R. station in that town to another, for which the charge was ten cents extra. His ticket did not call for extras and he entered action against the G. T. R. to recover the amount. Clarry's case was not suited but he has appealed and the Divisional Court at Toronto has reserved judgment.

In this matter Clarry doesn't care a hang about the ten cents—it's the principle involved. A kicker of this description is not an unmitigated nuisance. The kicker may succeed in making himself generally disagreeable but he often proves a human benefactor.

Clarry's kick will cost him a lot of time, trouble, and expense, but if he carries his point the public will reap the benefit. The G. T. R. will then be forced to carry their passengers from one station to the other free of charge.

Almost every one has had some experience with the trunk-smashing baggage-man. He has about outlived his usefulness but when he was at the summit of his glory he used to take a fiendish delight in marring the symmetry of passengers' trunks. His unhappy victims hardly ever sought redress.

It is related that one day a burly baggage man held a trunk aloft and with a broad grin on his face let it drop, with a resounding smash, on its end. He accomplished his purpose—the trunk was ruined. The owner approached the baggage man and politely requested him to settle for the trunk. The railway man simply laughed at him. But the man was a kicker. Although important business demanded his attention elsewhere he stopped at the place three days and at a loss of $80 to himself succeeded in making the baggage man pay for the trunk as well as the costs of the action. He lost money, but he did the travelling public a great service.

A complaint has been lodged against the Chief-of-Police. They say he is too officious—kicks at trifles. A good, strong, kicker is required in this town. Things have been tolerated that should have been kicked over long ago. The Chief's course may prove disagreeable to some but then again it may redound to the benefit of the town.

Talking about kickers the Star staff has the awful gall to challenge the combined staffs of The Express and Beaver to a friendly game of foot ball. Caesar's ghost, if the same transpires, we won't do a "ting" but knock the twinkle out of the Star. It will be smiling its game back.

While he is rational enough most of the time he has moments of mental aberration. The other day he gave a graphic description of the devil, or a devil, that had visited him in his cell during the night.

Troy has great descriptive powers and his portrayal of the appearance of the devil that visited him shows that it must have left a vivid impression on his mind. Troy's devil differs from the popular conception of his Satanic Majesty.

Nemesis, in the form of a guilty conscience, has been camping on Troy's trail and he feels that his sin has found him out. He thinks that he has committed an unpardonable offense for which he must pay the penalty. Something impelled him to make the confession which implicated him in the murder of Angus McLeod.

Troy cannot realize the enormity of his crime, although he has been trying hard to do so. He has left hope behind and is indifferent as to his fate. He doesn't think he will be hanged, but he believes that he will be fittingly punished and an example made of him by some unseen power.

While it may be admitted that Troy is a little queer the view may be held that he is sane enough to hang. The question naturally arises, does Troy entertain a spite against Hughes? That he is of a vindictive nature is borne out by his past record and his own words.

At Hughes' trial, which will take place next week, the crown will seek to corroborate Troy's story by bringing forward witnesses to prove that the two men were in Port Hope together, and left that town for Napanee.

Troy asserts that there is no feeling in his head. He states with all seriousness that at times his head is as soft as putty, and that at other times it is as hard as a rock. There is no doubt that Troy was born with the taint of crime in his blood. He could no more help going sideways than a crab. We venture to say that if his genealogy was traced you would find that he was "Cursed from the very beginning,

By deeds that others had done;
More sinned against than sinning,
And so is many a one."
